Course Overview

In this course students will be introduced to the historical, formal and theoretical components of film studies. We will pay special attention to film analysis and composition, and develop a vocabulary for talking about how films communicate ideas, engage audiences, and reflect culture. To accomplish these goals, we will watch films every day, in class, and discuss them using terms and concepts from the course readings.

Course Goals

Develop familiarity with the technological and historical development of film from early cinema to contemporary blockbusters.

Understand and apply the formal vocabulary of film analysis and composition

Be conversant in theoretical questions related to film as an art form and as a technology for communication
